What's Inside

- Resolution Bingo
  Four unique cards. Play as a conversation game: guests share hopes for the year, and everyone marks matching squares. Five in a row wins — or just see who fills the most.
- Year-in-Review Trivia
  A host template for ten personal questions about your group, plus player answer sheets. This is about your year, not the news.
- The Last Ten Minutes
  A simple prompt for each minute from 11:50 to midnight, so the countdown feels like a shared moment instead of a scramble.
- Time-Capsule Cards
  Write a wish, a glad moment, or a prediction. Seal them and open the envelope next New Year's Eve.

HOW TO USE THIS PACK

Print on US Letter paper. Card stock is nicer for bingo and time-capsule cards. Cut on the dashed lines. Have pens ready, plus a jar or envelope for the time-capsule notes.

A cozy at-home party does not need a packed program. Use trivia or bingo earlier in the evening, write time-capsule cards after dessert, and save The Last Ten Minutes for, well, the last ten minutes.

If kids are celebrating too, run an early "midnight" with the same countdown prompts at 8 or 9 p.m., then let them head to bed while the adults keep the later one.

Mark a Square When Someone Shares It

Guests take turns sharing a hope for the year. If it appears on your card, mark it. Five in a row — or a full card — wins. Cut the two cards apart.

Host Question Template

Write ten short questions about your group's year — trips, meals, inside jokes, new jobs or hobbies, funny moments. Skip the news and keep it personal, kind, and optional. Read each question once, give people time to write, then share answers.

01 A trip someone took, or a place they couldn't stop talking about

02 A new job, project, class, or hobby

03 A funny moment from this friend group

04 A favorite meal you shared, or a recipe someone made

05 A show, book, game, or song that kept coming up

06 A home project, new pet, or small change in someone's daily life

07 A celebration you attended together

08 A nickname, running joke, or phrase of the year

09 A goal someone talked about — and whether they poked at it

10 A wild-card memory only this group would know

A few host tips

Write the questions before guests arrive, but leave one blank in case a better story comes up that night.

Keep answers short. The fun is in the reveal, not a long quiz.

If a question might embarrass someone, cut it. Kind always wins.

Player Answer Sheets

Print two copies of this page for four players, or cut the sheets apart. One point per correct answer.

A Countdown You Can Actually Host

At 11:50, put this page where you can see it and start at ten. One prompt a minute. If you miss a minute, skip ahead. Midnight is the only cue you cannot move.

10 Everyone shares one favorite moment from this year — one sentence only.

9 Group photo practice. Find the light, squeeze in, take one for fun.

8 Fill glasses for the toast. Sparkling wine or sparkling juice, guest's choice.

7 Write one wish or prediction on a time-capsule card and fold it.

6 Hats, tiaras and noisemakers on. Confetti poppers within reach.

5 Thirty seconds of dancing, even if it's only in place.

4 Toast rehearsal: clink with the people next to you.

3 Lights down. Countdown on the TV or a clock in the center of the room.

2 Everyone in one room. Phones ready for a photo — or put away, your house, your rule.

1 A deep breath together. Then the last ten seconds, out loud, as a group.

At midnight

Cheer, toast, take the group photo, and pop the confetti if you have it. Then play the song you picked earlier. The first moments of the year should feel easy, not busy.

Write It Down. Open It Next Year.

Each guest fills one or more cards, folds them, and drops them in a jar or envelope. Open the whole collection next New Year's Eve. Cut on the dashed lines.
